Please Accept Our Sincerest Gratitude

We would like to express our gratitude to the parish family of St. Juliana for the tremendous outpouring of love you showed to our brother, Father Art. We were overwhelmed with your graciousness.

Feast of the Assumption: August 15th

An assumption is something you take for granted. "I assume because you have a baseball bat over your shoulder and a baseball glove on your hand, that you're going to or coming from playing baseball." Or, another example: "I assume that you're quite proud of your son who has just won that scholarship to college." Then again: "I assume that you'll be looking after your Dad, now that your Mom has passed away."

To assume something is to take it for granted.

When people are very dear to us, it can be assumed that we're going to behave towards them in a certain way, no? In fact, if we make protestations of love for someone, and then do nothing to express that love in concrete terms, we would be considered hypocrites. Love and friendship imply certain assumptions.

Think of the people whom you call your friends, even your "best" friends. Don't you, in a way, "take them for granted?" That is to say, don't you assume that they will be there for you and you for them? It is the very essence of love and friendship to reach a stage of "assumption." You know what I mean?

Many people live in a constant state of anxiety, wondering whether they are really lovable to their friends and families. That can really be painful. They think they have to constantly make themselves worthy of love. In other words, they never feel free enough to "presume on" others' friendship or love; they never enter into the sublime realm of "assumed love."

When this stage of "assumed love" is reached in a relationship, how blessed are the people who can make and live by that "assumption!"

If you cannot assume that someone loves you, you live in a state of tension, self-doubt, hesitancy. You are very, very careful what you say or do, lest it offend the other. In a real sense, you cannot be yourself, because you are aware of real or imagined expectations about the relationship. But when you can assume that the other person has your well-being and happiness at heart, you experience the peace and unutterable joy of ASSUMPTION.

Of course Mary was assumed into heaven! She could take that for granted, because she knew her Son's desires for her. And she knew that He could "take for granted" her desires for Him. They had both entered into the Mystery of Assumption.

Don't just stand there, watching Mary being assumed! Jump on the bandwagon!

Father Bob Grib, S.J.

Because of letters and comments in the papers, I put together a short article on our theology of Church. The enclosed article is intended to put the news reports in theological perspective.

Francis Cardinal George, OMI
Archbishop of Chicago

Who is the Church?

A couple of weeks ago, the Holy See released a short document entitled, "Responses to Some Questions Regarding Certain Aspects of the Doctrine on the Church." Because of some reactions to this document addressed to Catholic theologians, it is probably good to review who we understand the Church to be. First of all, the Church begins with Jesus Christ. He is the Church's head and the Church is his Body. The Church belongs to him, and all who call themselves Christ's disciples or followers belong to the Church on his terms.

What are those terms? They are found in receiving the gifts that Jesus gained for the world through his death and resurrection and that he himself wants all who know and love him to share. In other words, we belong to Christ's Church to the extent that our lives are shaped by Christ's gifts. The most important gift is the grace that brings us God's own life and our salvation. Grace is invisible, as are faith and hope and love itself. All those whose lives are shaped by God's grace are, in some fashion, related to Jesus Christ and his Church, even if they don't know who Christ is. But the Church is also a visible community; and the three gifts of Christ that visibly mark the Church he established are 1) the profession of the apostolic faith, 2) the celebration of the seven sacraments, and 3) apostolic governance.

The apostolic faith was proclaimed in the preaching of the apostles themselves. The Church existed before the New Testament was written, but the written witness to apostolic preaching is found in the Acts of the Apostles and in the writings of St. Peter and St. Paul and St. John in the New Testament. The Church expresses this faith in the creeds of the Ecumenical Councils and in the professions of faith that have been written as the Church's understanding of the truths God wants us to believe has deepened through the ages. The essentials of the apostolic faith in the official teaching of the Church have been preserved through the action of the Holy Spirit, the spirit of truth that Jesus promised to send his Church to keep her from error.

The seven sacraments of the apostolic Churches are actions of the risen Christ and continue to be celebrated in the Catholic Church and in the Orthodox Churches. At the time of the Protestant Reformation, the sacrament of Holy Orders was explicitly rejected by the Reformers, and ordaind priests were succeeded by ministers. This action leaves only sacramental baptism common to all Christians. It also changed how Protestants understand church governance.

Apostolic governance in the Catholic Church is continued visibly through the body of pastors that succeeds to the authority of the apostles as evangelizers and heads of local churches. These pastors constitute the college of bishops in union with the successor of St. Peter, the Bishop of Rome. The Catholic Church understands herself as enjoying, only through Jesus' own will and love, all the gifts that he left for his people. Other Churches and faith communities enjoy most or some of these gifts, depending on their history and their own self-understanding. We should try to understand people as they understand themselves. Many sincere followers of Jesus Christ reject the Catholic Church's understanding of who the Church is. Some think Catholics are not even Christian; others say the Pope is the anti-Christ. They don't want to be Catholic, and that should be respected. But the Catholic understanding of Church should also be respected. It has a two thousand year history. It seems somewhat strange that only the Catholic Church's self-understanding should be a matter of public indignation.

Finally, the recent statement of the Holy See says nothing about any individual's eternal salvation. The linkage of the Church's self-understanding about her visible gifts to conclusions about the invisible gift of an individual's salvation is a different question. Nor does the Church's teaching about her objective gifts draw any conclusions about an individual's subjective holiness. One can be baptized and still sin; one can be ordained and still betray the Lord. Nevertheless, both baptism and ordination remain sacramental means of holiness.

What we as Catholics need most is a clear grasp of the Catholic faith. Without that, every report or article by people who don't understand our Church or have even rejected her faith causes unnecessary dismay. Our parishes and schools should increase their efforts to teach the Church's faith as it comes to us from the apostles, so that Catholics can rest secure in that faith and be eager to share it and all Christ's gifts with others.
